AZALEA CULTURE

Azaleas thrive best in partial shade, dense shade should be avoided. Well established plants can be planted in full sun (except hot dry areas). Avoid reflected heat.

Azaleas must have perfect drainage and an acid growing medium. Acid peat moss seems to give the best results.

PLANTING:

In planting Azaleas, dig a hole twice the width and one and a half times the depth of the pot that the plant is in. If drainage is not excellent, the hole should be made deeper, with gravel in the bottom. Then fill it with wet peat and firm well; remove enough peat in the center of hole to plant. Be sure that the plant sets slightly high, rather than in a depression. This helps to keep the soil from washing in and filling up the pores of the peat moss. A band of metal or wood may be placed around the edge of the peat moss, extending slightly below and above the surface to help keep the soil and peat apart.

To transplant, cut down with a spade completely around the plant at the soil and peat line, pry slightly, and the plant is easily removed. If there seems to be much soil on the top or sides of the ball of peat moss, with a hose wash away as much soil as is possible without greatly damaging the ball. Then dig the hole slightly larger and add two or three more inches of fresh peat moss to the bottom and sides and replant.

Whenever a plant starts to turn yellow, take it out and wash away the soil and replant, but do not fertilize. Do not plant in too shady or wet location. We recommend transplanting every two years.

WATERING:

Azaleas are shallow rooted and will be damaged if allowed to become extremely dry and excessive wilting results. Neither will they stand a continued soggy condition, so water sufficiently to keep them moist only until the next period of watering.

An occasional heavy watering during the summer and especially just ahead of fertilizing will help to flush out any excessive salts that may have accumulated due to constant light waterings.

FERTILIZING:

Feed Azaleas lightly from the first of March to the first of August. Cottonseed Meal, Acid Fertilizer or Camellia fertilizer may be used with excellent results. Use them lightly as Azaleas are easily burned by fertilizer. Be sure the plant is wet before any fertilizer is applied and then water well after applying.

Iron chelate helps to maintain green foliage.

PESTS:

Thrip and Red Spider are pests that may attack Azaleas. D. D. T. and Malathion, when combined with a light oil spray (1%) give good results.

Flower Spot is a fungus that rots the flowers or even the buds on the Azaleas and is controlled by cleanliness. Keep all old and damaged flowers gathered up to prevent reinfestation. The disease will be carried over to the following season if infested flowers are allowed to remain on the plant or fall to the peat or soil around them. Fungus diseases are most active during cloudy or rainy weather.

MARSHALL'S CAMELLIA NUR

Camellias for ... 1963

This list describes only a portion of the varieties which we have growing in our nursery. Prices quoted are for well rooted plants in 1 gallon containers at the nursery. On all orders to be packed and shipped, we charge an additional 50 cents for each 1 gallon container, and $1.00 for each 3 to 5 gallon container — minimum packing charge is $1.00.

We invite you to visit our nursery at any time. We have a large number of varieties priced from $5.00 each in 4 gallon containers and from $10.00 each in Redwood Boxes.

Prices subject to change without notice.

* An asterisk after the price denotes grafted plants.

LOCATION: Camellias grow best where they are partially shaded during the hottest part of the day. North or east side of walls, buildings or under trees that are not too dense.

PLANTING: The soil for your Camellias should have (1) Good drainage; (2) A high humus content; (3) A slight acid reaction (PH 5 to 6.5).

For small or medium sized plants, dig a hole 24 inches across and 18 inches deep. Mix soil and Peat Moss in equal parts. Place part of this mixture in hole and tamp well. Fill, until when plant is set in place, soil level on plant will be slightly higher than surrounding soil, then finish filling, firm and water well.

WATERING: Keep your plants moist but not soggy wet. Water well, but only as often as necessary to keep soil moderately moist. It is beneficial to syringe the foliage frequently during the summer, but avoid wetting foliage when sun is bright or plants are in bloom.

FERTILIZING: An acid fertilizer should be used, but only on established plants. Apply in early spring (March), but never use more than the directions supplied with the fertilizer indicate. One or two more feedings may be applied at 60-day intervals, with only one-half as much fertilizer being used. Be sure soil is moist before applying and water thoroughly after fertilizing.

PRUNING AND DISBUDDING: Prune only as much as necessary to shape your plant. Overly vigorous or objectionable growth should be nipped before it gets out of bounds or pruned at the end of the flowering season. When pruning or cutting blooms use sharp tools and cut just above a leaf or growth bud.

PEST CONTROL: Ant control greatly aids in combatting Aphis and Scale. Any proven Aphis spray is suitable. A 2% oil spray such as Volck is best for scale. For leaf eating insects use a stomach poison such as Crylite.

If a branch or plant suddenly withers it may be Fomopsis Blight which is treated by removing and burning all of the diseased parts and spraying with Bordeaux then, and again next spring.

Flower Blight is revealed by brownish or rotting spots on the flowers and is most noticeable in damp weather. Control is by removing all old or damaged flowers which prevents this Fungus disease from being carried on to damage the flowers the following season.
